This site doesn't break down into counties, but it has some interesting stuff for each state. They are known for their Native American information.

+Ancestor Hunt

This is an interesting site that you may know as the one on which to find newspaper links for each state, however, it has so much more. As of July 15, 2021, they are in the process of putting on links by state but haven't gotten to Washington. It looked like they were on Vermont, so Washington should be live soon.

Washington State Library

PO Box 42460, Olympia WA 98504-2460

<https://stlow.iii.com/>

Here is what the Washington State Library reference librarian suggests:

I recommend you start at the Genealogy page on our website: <https://www.sos.wa.gov/library/genealogy.aspx> to see what types of genealogical collections we have available at our library.

Our Genealogy Research Links page will help you with other online resources (including yearbooks) that are not necessarily at our library but still helpful for Washington area genealogy research.

You can search our library catalog online to see what we have in our genealogy collections specifically for Lewis County.

- Go to <https://www.sos.wa.gov/library/catalog.aspx>
- Choose Genealogy Collection under Additional Options
- Choose Keywords in the Search By box
- Enter “lewis county” in the Search Words box

You can also search our library catalog online to see what we have in our newspaper collections specifically for Lewis County

- Go to <https://www.sos.wa.gov/library/catalog.aspx>
- Choose Washington Newspapers under Additional Options
- Choose County in the Search By box
- Enter Lewis in the Search Words box

Most of our newspaper collections are on microfilm. But some have been digitized; currently the only digitized newspaper for Lewis County is The Daily Hub newspaper (Centralia) 1914-1916.

You can search the Daily Hub at our Washington Digital Newspapers website: <https://washingtondigitalnewspapers.org/?a=cl&cl=CL1&sp=DH&e=-----en-20--1--txt-txIN--->

Our collections focus mostly on published materials rather than unpublished, so we do not have collections dedicated to photographs, family records, correspondence, or ephemera here at the library though you may find those items included in some manuscript or other rare collections.

The “State Library Photograph Collection” is no longer at the State Library. It has moved to the State Archives and can now be searched using the Digital Archives website: <https://digitalarchives.wa.gov/Collections/TitleInfo/749>. Digital Archives has other photo collections as well: <https://digitalarchives.wa.gov/Collections#RSID:22>.

We also direct people looking for photos and other ephemera to the Washington Rural Heritage website. Rural Heritage is a program funded by the State Library that helps other local organizations (libraries, historical societies, museums, etc) digitize their local history collections and makes those collections available online in one place. The photos on the site belong to the organizations that submitted them.

A great place to search for ephemera like fruit box labels and pamphlets (as well as photographs) is the Washington State Historical Society: <https://www.washingtonhistory.org/research/collections-search/>.

Archives West

<https://archiveswest.orbiscascade.org>

Searching Archives West might actually be a good starting point. It has information on collections from members of our regional library consortia. You can search by region and library, as well as by subject. In addition, if you scroll down on that page, there is always a “What’s New?” section. Right now, it’s listing some recently added collection guides on oral histories. Then, you can reach out to the individual repositories for more information.

1. UW Libraries web site: <https://lib.washington.edu/>
 - a. Start here to link to any of the UW’s 15 libraries for information about hours, etc., as well as units within Suzzallo/Allen, the main library, such as Maps/Newspapers and Special Collections.
 - b. The front page also links to databases, research guides and other online resources. Access to many of the online databases is limited to current UW affiliates as indicated by a lock icon. Other databases without a lock icon, such as WorldCat, can be anywhere. Visitors using computers at the University of Washington are able to access any of the restricted databases, including digitized newspapers.
2. UW Libraries Catalog Search: <https://lib.washington.edu/>
 - a. Also located on the Libraries main web page, search for any of the Libraries 11 million plus items by typing keywords into the search box.
 - b. The catalog search for rare books, historical maps, newspapers, and many other format types.
 - c. If you find an item of interest, look at the full record for the call number and also the library location.
 - d. Also take a look at the subject headings assigned to the items of interest. You can click on any of them, such as these to find more material on those subjects:
 - i. Lewis County \(Wash.\) --History
 - ii. Lewis County \(Wash.\) -- Biography
 - iii. Lewis County \(Wash.\) -- Genealogy
3. Digital Collections: <https://digitalcollections.lib.washington.edu/digital/search/>
 - a. Photographs and other visual material can be found in the Libraries’ Digital Collections. As well as a variety of other records including some film footage, oral histories, documents such as letters and other historical items.
 - b. Also part of the Digital Collection are the UW Tyee Yearbooks: <https://content.lib.washington.edu/uwdocsweb/index.html>

4. Archives West: <http://archiveswest.orbiscascade.org/>
 - a. The UW is part of a consortium of academic libraries in the Pacific Northwest with Special Collections. Special Collections include rare items such as a books and maps, as well as family records, correspondence, ephemera such as pamphlets, biography files, scrapbooks and more.
 - b. Search using your own keywords in the Search box. For example, searching “Lewis County” yields 124 results. Using quotes ensures that that works are adjacent to each other in the results. The 124 collections are from numerous Special Collections which are listed on the left-hand side of the page. Under the “Repository” heading you can click on University of Washington Libraries, Special Collections to see just those collections relating to Lewis County in the UW’s Special Collections.
5. Pacific Northwest Regional Index
 - a. This is an offline card index (person, place, and subject) maintained for over 90 years of citations to newspapers, county histories, WPA projects and other regional histories. Only a small fraction has been digitized so if you visit the UW, this is something you want to set aside some time to search. As noted below, we are happy to answer questions via email and can search the index of your behalf for specific topics such as a name, location, etc. Many of the citations refer to items now in the public domain, so you may not even need to visit the UW to get to the item cited.
6. Ask Us <https://www.lib.washington.edu/about/contact/email>
 - a. The Libraries have an online system where anyone can ask a question about our holdings, hours, locations, and more. There is also an online chat, but this service is part of a larger consortium so if you select chat evenings or weekend the person responding might not be located at the UW. Email questions will be directed to the right part of the Libraries so your response will be from someone experienced in the holdings for that part of the Libraries.

Churches

Catholic Church

- Old records had been sent to the Archdiocese in Seattle.
- Local churches have only current records but that because the persons are still living, all local records are private and not for the public.
- Anyone researching would have to contact the archdiocese. There is a fee.

Assembly of God

They do not have records, nor do they send records to a central repository.

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints

They have records that are searchable on the Family Search Website. Information on living persons is not available to the public.

Contact local churches for possible records.

Schools

Many school records are on Family Search:

<https://www.familysearch.org/ark:/61903/3:1:3QS7-89N8-RVB4?owc=7KCZ-S21%3A180931501%3Fcc%3D1910364&wc=7GM5-FGL%3A180931501%2C1061926601&cc=1910364>

- These records are not indexed. Therefore, you must browse through them.
- The records originally came from the Washington State Archives. The archives are slowly indexing them and putting digital images on their website.
- The archives have more records in their facility than it shows on family search but currently you must go to Olympia in person to do research them.
- The school census from 1907 and older have just an age for each student as well as their parents or guardians. Starting in 1908, the actual birthdate for each student is listed.
- The districts are listed by a number that was assigned to them by ESD 113 (The governing body for Lewis County and surrounding counties). If you don't know what school district the parents were in, it can be hard to decide where you need to look.
